gopāla-pūrva-tāpanīyopaniṣat

Foreword: Normally a critical edition attempts to find as wide a range of manuscripts as possible, establishes their geographical and chronological limits, and then uses that which is common to them as historically closest to the Ur-text. In this case, we have been unable to produce a scientifically reliable critical edition, due to numerous methodological constraints. Nevertheless, since a rather large number of variant readings came to our attention in the published editions that we came across, we have decided to record these variants here in the hope that they may serve in a future, more scientific effort.

The problem with using printed editions is that they are rarely true to the manuscripts that are used, as each editor cherry-picks the readings that suit him. This is not necessarily true of all the editions that we have used. Indeed, the VV readings are likely true to the manuscripts on which they were based. BY is already a critical edition, but appears to have been riddled with flaws and is so less reliable in establishing the Ur-readings.

I might also be accused of cherry picking, but after studying the various readings I have opted for the following: simplicity. Although it may be argued that deliberately arcane formations and syntax may have been the original author's intent, in an effort to reproduce an ancient-sounding text, on the whole, the proliferation of particles like u, ha, and iti, which are the most frequent sources of variance, if without significance for the meaning are best left out, no matter whether they are the derivations of the original author's imagination or later scribes.

Asterisks (*) indicate readings that the editor feels are clearly wrong. Not all such readings have been noted.

The latest edition has been prepared with the help of Raṇachora Sharan's commentary. It is designated R, while R₁ refers to differing readings found in the commentary of the same edition. It appears that R = Jha₂, though for his commentary Jha follows the edition designated Jha₁.
